

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A spindle motor is formed so as to support a pivot of a rotor by a pair of open bearings.

The open bearings thus constructed will be less expensive and simple structures, so that a manufacturing cost thereof is reduced compared to a conventional spindle motor using a pair of ball bearings with shields. Accordingly, a low-cost spindle motor can be provided.